Ladin dropped out of school in Saudi Arabia and joined the Afghan resistance almost immediately following the Soviet invasion in December 1979. His money and his experience as a frontline fighter enhanced his reputation. Bin Ladin had drawn on his family's wealth and donations from sympathetic merchant families in the Persian Gulf region, to organize the Islamic Salvation Foundation, or al-Qa'ida ("The Base"). The foundation maintained recruitment centers and guesthouses in several Middle Eastern countries and organized and funded paramilitary training camps in Pakistan and Afghanistan. Under al-Qa'ida's auspices, Bin Ladin also imported heavy equipment to build roads, tunnels, caves, hospitals, and storage depots in Afghanistan for use by the mujahedin and, eventually, to form part of his terrorist infrastructure. The Afghan experience was key to radicalizing Bin Ladin and cementing his dedication to Islamic extremist causes. It provided him with an opportunity to make and strengthen contacts with a wide variety of Islamic extremists of various nationalities. Many of the men who became key members of the al-Qa'ida leadership met and fought alongside him in Afghanistan against the Soviets. It is also at this time that Bin Ladin began perverting the teachings of Islam and the Prophet Mohammed for his own violent purposes. And it is then that he began to exploit underlying social, political, and economic discontent and widespread resentment of the West in many parts of the Muslim world. In a 1988 press interview, he claimed, "I felt it a sign from God to battle all opponents of Islam when a mortar shell that landed a few feet away from me did not explode." Urged on by fervent Islamic radicals, he began using his personal fortune to shelter and employ hundreds of militant, stateless "Afghan. Arabs" and train them for jihad or holy war around the world. Although Bin Ladin returned to Saudi Arabia to work in his family's construction business after the Soviets left Afghanistan in early 1989, he continued to support militant Islamic causes and radicals who by then had begun redirecting their efforts against secular and moderate Islamic governments in the region. He began publicly criticizing the Saudi Government and harshly condemned the Gulf War and the presence of US and other Western forces in the Arabian Peninsula.

If any doubts remained about the emerging threat to the United States represented by Bin Ladin and al-Qa'ida, they were gradually dispelled by a series of declarations he issued from his refuge in Afghanistan during the 1996-1998 timeframe.

- In an undated interview in Afghanistan published in July 1996 in the London daily The Independent, Bin Ladin declared that the killing of Americans in the Khobar Towers bombing in Saudi Arabia in June 1996 marked the beginning of the war between Muslims and the United States.
- One month later, in August 1996, Bin Ladin, in collaboration with radical Muslim clerics associated with his group, issued a religious edict or fatwa in which he called "Declaration of War" authorizing attacks against Western military targets on the Arabian Peninsula.
- Eighteen months later, six months prior to the 1998 US Embassy bombings in East Africa, al-Qa'ida issued another fatwa—under the banner of the "World Islamic Front for Jihad Against Jews and Crusaders"—stating that all Muslims have a religious duty "to kill Americans and their allies, both civilian and military" worldwide.
- During a subsequent media interview, Bin Ladin explained that all US citizens were legitimate targets because they pay taxes to the US Government.

By the time of the 1998 East Africa bombings, al-Qa'ida had established its intention to inflict high casualties and a modus operandi emphasizing careful planning and exhaustive field preparations, which Bin Ladin saw as a prerequisite for the type of spectacular operations he had in mind.

For example, when asked in a November 1996 interview why his organization had not yet conducted attacks in response to its August fativa statement, Bin Ladin replied, "If we wanted to carry out small operations, it would have been easy to do so after the statements, but the nature of the battle requires qualitative operations that affect the adversary, which obviously requires good preparation."

Responding to the Millennium threat, the attack on the USS Cole, and the rash of indications of planned terrorist actions during Ramadan 2000 and the months leading to September 11 worked to shift the focus of operational effort away from internal Afghan operations.

CIA submitted a revised strategic proposal on counterterrorism to the NSC Staff in December 2000 that would have significantly expanded our activities

 It was too late for the departing Clinton administration to take action on this strategic proposal, however.

creation of new bureaucratic entities that drew on CIA expertise and staff personnel. Indeed, CIA had to contend with the resource demands of several emerging or heightened threats and events including:

• Mounting concern over proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. This issue moved sharply to the forefront as concerns arose over the lack of security of former Soviet WMD stockpiles, aggressive efforts by Iraq, Iran, and North Korea to develop these weapons and their means of delivery and, at the end of the decade, the emergence of India and Pakistan's nuclear tensions.

In undertaking this integration effort, the ADCI for Collection convened daily meetings with analysts and collection officers from NSA, NGA, and CIA to develon a collaborative collection effort.

• Through focused collection, we were able to build a more complete picture of

• This integrated intelligence collection effort also supported military targeting operations prior to September 11, including the cruise missile attack against the al-Qa'ida training camp complex in northeastern Afghanistan in August 1998; in addition, it helped to provide baseline data for the US Central Command's target planning against al-Qa'ida facilities and infrastructure throughout Afghanistan.

Following the September 11 attacks, the IC redoubled its efforts to collect and integrate all of the intelligence disciplines.

This information, greatly facilitated our ability to locate, track, and support US military operations against al-Oa'ida and Taliban

Community collection officers meet daily to ensure focused and dynamic collection on Bin Ladin and residual al-Qa'ida leadership. Warning and Analysis Our analysts assessed al-Qa'ida's modus operandi, capabilities, and intentions to acquire weapons of mass destruction. Similarly, they warned policymakers during the summer of 2001 that the threat of terrorist attacks was real and serious. Such performance was the result of significant measures by the Directorate of Intelligence to enhance our analytical capabilities assigned to this target. most analysts were consumed by tactical work. We needed to get the right balance between strategic and tactical analytical work by giving more effort to strategic analytic issues.
CIA therefore created a Strategic Analytic Unit in July 2001 to fix this	• problem	•
The Unit allowed us to isolate the analysts assigned to it from the grind of daily crises to focus on the bigger picture.

i n g	ng a t in plot	Many of these steps contributed to our analysts' warning during the of 2001 that Bin Ladin and al-Qa'ida were engaged in intensive operational and preparations against US interests. We documented the increased threat in telligence products such as the President's Daily Brief (PDB) and the SEIB, ts in the Arabian Peninsula and Europe. Four current intelligence pieces ly stand out.
	•	On June 29, 2001, our analysts published a piece in the SEIB entitled "Terrorism: Bin Ladin Threats Are Real" which concluded that recent indications of near-term attacks were not part of a disinformation campaign but were consistent with other reporting and public statements by Bin Ladin
	, •	A June 30 SEIB article entitled "Bin Ladin Plans High Profile Attacks," al-Qa'ida operatives expected the next round of attacks to have dramatic consequences.
•		Another SEIB article, on July 25, noted that, although one Bin Ladin attack had been delayed for a few months, preparations for other, near-term attacks were still underway.
•	* 25 h	A SEIB article on August 7, 2001, "Bin Ladin Determined to Strike in US," underscored Bin Ladin's desire to conduct terrorist attacks in the US homeland. It noted that the Millennium plot to bomb the Los Angeles airpormight have been Bin Ladin's first serious attempt to strike in the United States. It pointed out that al-Qa'ida members—including some who are US citizens—have resided in or traveled to the US for years, and the group apparently maintains a support structure that could aid attacks.
		The interagency Intelligence Committee on Terrorism, through CTC's ty Counterterrorism Board, also issued several threat advisories during the er o	f 2001.
		In addition to the analytic effort done in CTC, analysts from across CIA te of Intelligence contributed to the counterterrorism mission by doing that a successful operation to capture was not feasible. Following receipt of this new	• directive, the group developed new plans had launched an ambush against a convo	ÿ of vehicles in which UBL was believed to be a passenger. The ambush was terminated when the attackers heard the voices of women and children

We have been unable to confirm that this operation actually took place. Although the group continued monitoring the activities of UBL until the	,
September 11, 2001 World Trade Center attacks, they were unable to execute a successful operation to capture UBL.
The principal reason for the inability to execute the capture	• and render operation was the absence of timely and accurate intelligence on the plans, intentions, and travel of UBI throughout	Ļ the operational period. UBL was absent, for extended periods of time, from the area in UBL also had an adverse impact on efforts by the indigenous group to launch an operation throughout the operational period. Various questions on the reporting accuracy of the indigenous group also surfaced during the course of this operation. Most of the questions were never answered satisfactorily. This created major difficulties in making decisions regarding proposed operations based solely on reporting from this group.
Evacuting The Mi
Executing The Plan
In the spring of 1999 CIA began to put in place the elements of its operational strategy, "The Plan." At the time of the Plan's creation, CIA already had made a significant impact on the al Qa'ida organization and its affiliates.
By the spring of 1999 CIA had	آثار ينا

the Persian Gulf region. In addition, these operations created disruptions in the regional and international terrorist infrastructure al-Qa'ida was attempting to	; build in those countries and the region, and we believe created doubts in al Qa'ida's perceptions about its ability to organize and operate with impunity.
to a second seco
 This activity was in addition to efforts to bring the perpetrators of the East Africa embassy bombings to justice. CIA operations sent the message that the United States was not only going after al Qa'ida for crimes it had already	:
committed but also seeking out, breaking up, and rendering to justice terrorists engaged in planning future attacks wherever we could find them.

There was an important, yet unintended, consequence of our vity against the al-Qa'ida target prior to our development of the Plan that deepened challenge of identifying and stopping the terrorists' activities. They increased their urity practices, not only for physically guarding Bin Ladin himself and his senior tenants, but also for compartmenting terrorist operations. Persistent publicity and leaks of information about our methods in the United States and abroad caused the terrorists to emphasize their compartmentation, and recruit individuals for operations who had never attracted any kind of attention Thus, paradoxically, our successes against the terrorists made it harder to break up their future operations. •	It is important to note that at this time CIA and the policy
.· . г	community saw the objectives of the Predator program as two-fold: giving the United States "eyes on the target" capability and collecting intelligence
: L
	 Twice in the fall of 2000, the Predator observed an individual most likely to be Bin Ladin; however, we had no way at the time to react to this information.
	District Lawrence Cont. 2001
÷	Planning began for a 2001 deployment, and counterterrorism officials discussed the possibility of capitalizing on an Air Force program to weaponize the Predator by adapting it to carry and fire Hellfire missiles.
	CIA recognized that significant issues would need to be resolved to implement the program.
	 CIA leadership from the beginning felt it important that there was a full understanding by the President and the National Security Council of the capabilities of the armed Predator and the implications of its use.
	The decision to advocate arming the Predator followed considerable denate within the Agency.
	Some contended that the potential risks involved in deploying an armed aircraft exceeded the potential intelligence return or operational advantages, while others argued that the opportunity to strike at Bin-Ladin, if he could be located, would outweigh the risks involved in an aircraft being shot down over Afghanistan.
	Another debate centered on whether reconnaissance only flights should be conducted while the weaponized capability was being engineered and policy and legal questions were being resolved.
	Some maintained that flying the Predator for reconnaissance purposes produced high-quality imagery intelligence and insights that could not be obtained otherwise.
•	Others posed what eventually became the Agency's position: that continued use of the UAV for reconnaissance only could reveal to al-Qa'ida and the Taliban the areas in Afghanistan in which the United States was particularly interested and possibly result in shooting one down. Bither premature discovery or loss would reduce the chances of success if policymakers later decided to use the weaponized aircraft.

Liability for lost Predators and developing a command and control arrangement also emerged as important issues.

Neither DoD nor CIA wanted to assume the cost of lost UAVs. While we finally agreed to split the cost evenly, the question was still in negotiation

It is important to emphasize, however, that this issue, while contentious, did not slow down the program. We continued to work all the preparations for deployment, including resolving several technical problems, with the missile, with the full expectation that the funding question would eventually be resolved.

reconnaissance purposes only.

Continued Warning

The leadership of the Agency repeatedly warned the policy community in the Executive Branch and the Congress of the seriousness of the threat.

- During the Millennium threat in late 1999, we told the President to expect between 5 to 15 terrorist attacks against American interests both here and overseas.
- In spring and summer of 2001, we sought every opportunity to vehemently express our concern about the high level of threat, and we launched the massive program of disruption described above.
- We placed the Bin Ladin threat prominently in every single annual testimony to the appropriate Congressional Committees on the Worldwide Threat since 1998. In the 1999 testimony, for example, the DCI stated that, "There is not the slightest doubt that Bin Ladin is planning attacks against us. He will strike anywhere in the world he thinks we are vulnerable...and I must tell you we are concerned [these strikes] can occur at any time." We also warned about the growing likelihood of an unconventional CBRN attack in the United States homeland and elsewhere. threat from al-Qa'ida was "an immediate and pressing concern." And that, "Despite [our] successes, there are limits to what we can do. We will generally not have specific time and place warning of terrorist attacks...The result...is that I consider it likely that over the next year or so that there will be an attempted terrorist attack against US interests. During the week of July 2, 2001, the DCI contacted by phone approximately 13 of his foreign liaison counterparts to urge them to redouble their efforts against al-Qa'ida. The chief of the Counterterrorist Center, the chief of Near East Division, and others made additional urgent calls The DCI's concern about the al-Qa'ida threat was such that he sent a memo to the top leaders of the CIA on December 4, 1998 stating the following: "We must now enter a new phase in our effort against Bin Ladin. Our work to date has been remarkable and in some instances heroic, yet each day we all acknowledge that retaliation is inevitable and that its scope may be far larger than we have previously experienced. We must redouble our efforts against Bin Ladin himself, his infrastructure, followers, finances, etc. with a sense of enormous urgency. We are at war. I want no resources or people spared in this effort, either inside CIA or the Community." Even with the intense focus on terrorism in general and Bin Ladin in particular, the Intelligence Community had to deal with several other major challenges that demanded the highest attention. Some issues were themselves closely linked to terrorism, such as the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the danger that some terrorist group would acquire such weapons. In this regard, we have worked extensively—both operationally and analytically—on the danger of rogue elements helping terrorists gain access to these weapons.

np	act of September 11
tio	The tragedies of September 11 did what the Intelligence Community's and incessant warnings could not do. They galvanized the attention and ended the oitions of the US Government; they galvanized and enraged the American people in; and they galvanized foreign governments to take strong measures against rism.
	 We, together with our allies, used our military power to clean out the terror den that Afghanistan had become.
	 We are spending billions of dollars in addressing lax security measures around our nation's transportation infrastructure, particularly airports.
	 We are implementing vastly increased security measures around our energy and industrial infrastructure.
	 We are revamping the process surrounding the administration of foreign student visas and developing the kinds of information flows to keep track of foreign visitors.
elli	We have significantly expanded the authorities and resources of the igence and Law Enforcement Communities to target the terrorist threat.
-	The USA Patriot Act of 2001, among other things, removed legal impediments to the ability of law enforcement agencies to share with CIA
ffices a.	Because of the strong support we have received from these Committees and the Congress, we have significantly increased the funding and security, logistics, technology, and communications support to our counterterrorism objectives.
	These new resources have buttressed our pre-September 11 initiatives to None of these authorities, resources, and measures would have been likely without the traumatic impact of September 11. There is now a whole new approach to the issue of homeland security.

 This country's infrastructure was absolutely unprotected, and we have been helping the President's Homeland Security Coordinator Tom Ridge think through how to protect it.

The attacks changed all the rules—perhaps forever.

The War with Terrorism: A Look Ahead

The war with international terrorism continues, and the fight will be long and difficult.

- It will require the patience and diligence that the President has asked for.
- It will require resources—sustained over a multi-year period—to re-capitalize our intelligence infrastructure at a pace that matches the changing technical and operational environment we face.
- It will also require countries that have previously ignored the problem of terrorism or refused to cooperate with us to step up and choose sides.
- It will require even closer sharing of information between intelligence and law enforcement agencies.

And despite all our efforts, another major terrorist attack is not just possible, but likely.

 Our effectiveness has increased since September 11, and the Intelligence Community will continue to be riveted to an offensive strategy of bringing that war to the terrorists. But, in the counterterrorism business there is no such thing as 100 percent success, and there never will be.

 A 1.000 batting average would mean the complete absence of terrorism, which would be extraordinary and unprecedented.

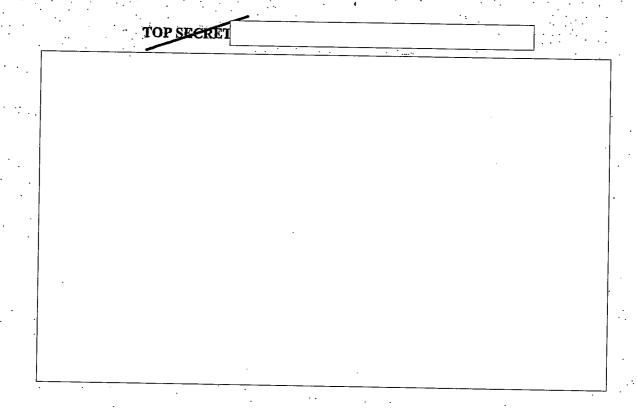

As we look ahead in this war with terrorism, and Congress tries to legislate effective measures against the threat, significant questions arise about security and freedom, safety and privacy, which call for extensive public debate and careful consideration by Congress. Terrorists have learned to exploit the vulnerabilities inherent in a free, open, and democratic society like ours.
